NO. 40

VOL. XXXII

Co. Club

The Rutland Herald for 1868.

The publishers of the HERALD encouraged by the liberal patronage awarded them in the past, and appreciating the importance which Rutland is fast assuming among her sister towns in the State, feel inspired to renew experiments on their part to meet the wants of an enlightened and generous public by doing all within their power to make the HERALD a first class paper.

In accordance with these views they have made arrangements to materially improve the mechanical appearance of the papers, and would announce that on the first day of January the Daily will be presented on new type and enlarged by an addition of matter equivalent to one fourth its present size. The Weekly will also be enlarged in the same proportion. The new dress and enlargement will make the mechanized appearance all that could be desired, and place the paper in a favorable position for comparison with our city contemporaries.

The editorial department will be in the hands of an able corps of editors, who will spare no pains to fill its columns with fresh and interesting matter. The latest current news of the day will be given, and especial attention paid to the publication of local, town, county and State items of interest. Arrangements have been made at great expense for the latest telegraphic news, and this feature of the HERALD will give its readers the same dispatches that appear in the Boston and New York dailies, and place them in possession of the latest intelligence from all sections. Reports of the proceedings of all the religious, historical, literary and agricultural societies, and other public meetings and gatherings, will be made a special department. A series of biographical sketches of the eminent men of Vermont, and historical sketches of towns and events, written by some of the most competent gentlemen in the State, will be published. A series of letters from Europe, also from the Western and Southern States, will appear weekly, thus making the Daily and Weekly HERALD the freshest and best newspaper in Vermont.

It will be our earnest effort to give the paper high tone, and present subjects that will command themselves to the taste and judgment of its patrons. The position we occupy in one of the most prosperous towns of the State, gives us an opportunity to make the HERALD a leading and influential journal, which will be constantly improved, by all the efforts that lay in our power to meet the progressive tendencies and spirit which are daily making demands upon our energies to promptly perform the duty due to the reading public.

Our prospects for the coming year could hardly be more flattering and satisfactory than at present, giving us confidence, that in making arrangements for enlarging and remodeling the HERALD we shall be liberally sustained in a largely increased subscription list, and in return be able to give our patrons the most reliable and attractive sheet in Vermont. Now is the time for those whose subscriptions are about to expire to renew for 1868. Each one of our present subscribers, with a little effort, can entice another in their neighborhood. We would present our thanks to those individuals in the county and State, who have furnished us items and communications during the past year, and ask a continuance of their favors.

The terms of the HERALD will be the same as last year. Daily $8.00; weekly $2.50.

MISCELLANY.

Sold at a High Price.

John Hamline's fault was that he was extremely foolish. Not among his own sex, you understand. Before a jury, for instance, John was as bold as a lion, and there was no lawyer in Brattleboro who had grown into so wide and profitable a practice as to crush every noble feeling or lofty aspiration. When we compare his condition previous to his twenty-first year as a poor down-trail slave, his present position as one of the popular lecturers of the day both in England and America, we must be led to believe that he is a very remarkable man.

As such John received it.

"But quite womanly," he said, with a laugh, "if you'll permit me to say so. Ladies don't do business exactly as men do, generally."

"That is true," laughing in return, and will no doubt serve as an explanation of—

"Oh, no, explanation is needed, Mrs. Rich—none at all."

"I was about to say—"

"I beg you won't apologize, madam," said John, very much distressed by the prospect, and growing rapidly more confused.

"If you will be kind enough to proceed to business, Mr. Hamline."

"I shall be happy to do so," said John, assuming an attitude of respectful attention.

Mr. Douglass stared at him with unfeigned astonishment. Was the man crazy?</
